Thalassemia & Sickle Cell Society

“ It isn't something that has to limit you in life”

report

Meher Unnisa's Daughter

until the child was 8 months. Suddenly the kid started to lose weight, stop eating and turned pale. She was taken to the doctor, who got few blood tests, including HbA2 and HbF to diagnose Thalassemia. Eventually the daughter was diagnosed as thalassemia major, this was not taken up in right spirit, father denied to accept that he can be a cause in transmitting thalassemia like situation to the kid and refused to take up the test for himself. Later father left the house to his parents place never to return back.

A parent's role is to provide for the physical wellbeing of a child, to teach the child morals and personal values, to train the child to navigate life, to provide emotional support, love and protection, and to make sure the child receives an education. Mothers are generally expected to be nurturing as well as to work if necessary, fathers are usually expected to financially provide for his children and to be the disciplinarian and moral guide; however, this is not always the way things play out. This was also not in the case of Meher Unnisa's Daughter.

Meher was married to a far relative in Nizamabad district, hence a consanguineous marriage. Both earned their living peacefully, husband as a carpenter and Meher as a Tailor. Soon they were blessed with a daughter. All went well Meher all by herself bringing the child as a single parent. The family is a much revered institution in India which is broken for this family. There are many adverse effect of parental separation. It affects a child's development. It may dampen academic performance; children may also suffer greater emotional and social difficulties than others do. With only mother bringing up the child factors such as poverty and developmental difficulties are also associated.

Meher's daughter is 12 years now, who is a victim of lack of clear understanding of Thalassemia by her father hence left them when she was just one. Mother is bringing the daughter to TSCS regularly for the past 11 years. They share a great bond of love & concern for each other. TSCS is compassionate to such parents and support them in all possible ways

Growing Up With An Absent Father & How it Impacts Life!

It has been noted across the world that fathers spend less time with children when compared to mothers. This limited involvement with their children's upbringing can be attributed to the historical, societal and traditional roles that men are obligated to play—the breadwinner, the sole financial provider and the supporter for the family.

However, paternal warmth and closeness have been shown to be beneficial because children who grow up with secure relationships with their parents are more likely to form healthy relationships as adults.

Growing up without a father has a significant impact on a person's life. An individual's relationship with their father, as well as his role in the family, influence their development and personality.

Research indicates that an absent father during the growing years is associated with a decreased likelihood of going to college as well as finding and maintaining a steady job, when compared to children who grew up in two-parent households.

Growing up without a father can also have adverse effects, which include lower self-esteem and a difficulty in expressing their emotions with others, even loved ones. They are also likely to experience difficulties in forming long-lasting emotional attachments.

Women who grew up without a father were more likely to engage in risky relationship. Women whose fathers were absent tend to show attention-seeking, and proximity-seeking behaviours towards other men.
